To Hell or Barbados chronicles the transportation of over 50,000 Irish men, women, and children in 1652 to Barbados, Jamaica, Montserrat and even Virginia to serve as slaves, prostitutes, and playthings of pervert planters. Instigated by Henry. Cromwell, the English sent "man-catchers" to round up native Irish and thus rid the country of what the Puritans called "the offal of men." Of those Irish that were allowed to remain, three-quarters of them were uprooted and forced to live in the least fertile part of the country, their lands having been confiscated and given to English planters who had financed and officered Cromwell's army. The legacy of this forced Diaspora -- not one Irish slave was able to return to his homeland -- is the part of Barbados known as "Scotland, " where 300 to 400 descendants of Cromwell's holocaust eke out a subsistence living, "pallid, weak, and depraved from inbreeding."
